

After watching violent programming (including video games) the kids are more violent toward each other, disrespectful of persons in authority, and more aggressive in general. Our standards need to be more strict in this area. Violent programming should not be allowed on TV at all, but at least not until after 10:00 p.m. Ratings of shows should be mandatory so parents know up front what will be contained in the shows their children are preparing to watch. The V-card capability should be mandatory in all TVs manufactured after 2005. Please consider adding these suggestions to your list of requirements for programming and manufacturing. Thank you for taking public comment on this important issue.
